Magic garden fantastic flowers coloring book for adults

It is easy to make your own colored flowers, especially carnations and daisies, but there are several tricks that help ensure great results. Here's how you do it. Materials: Flowers of bright color, coloring of food, waterseeds illustrated: Evaporation, cohesion, xylem, capillary action It is necessary: A few hours to one day The level of experience: Beginners Fresh flowers, preferably white: Do not use withered flowers, as they may not be able to absorb water well. A good option includes daisies and carnations. Food coloringWar water You can use other colors of flowers besides white. Just keep in mind that the final color of the flower will be a mixture of natural pigments in flower and color. Also, many floral pigments are pH indicators, so you can simply change the color of some flowers by putting them in water with baking soda (base) or lemon juice / vinegar (common weak acids). Trimming the stems of your flowers so that they are not excessively long. Make a oblique incision at the base of the stem underwater. The incision is slanted so that the stem will not sit flat at the bottom of the container. Flat incision can prevent the flower from taking it in water. Make an incision underwater to prevent air bubbles from forming in tiny tubes at the base of the stem, which would prevent water and color from being drawn. Add food coloring to the glass. Use about 20 to 30 drops of food dye per cup of warm water. Hot water will be taken more easily than cold water. Place the damp stem of the flower in colored water. Petals should become colored after a few hours. However, it can take as much as 24 hours, depending on the flower. You can place colored flowers in ordinary water or a flower preservative, but they will continue to drink water, changing the color pattern over time. Cut the stem down the middle and place each side in a different color to get bicolored flowers. What do you think you will get if you put half of the stem in blue and half in yellow? What do you think will happen if you take a colored flower and put its stem in a color of a different color? Several different processes are involved in herbal drinking, which is called transpiration. As water evaporates from flowers and leaves, the attractive force between water molecules — known as cohesion — draws more water. Water is extracted through tiny pipes (xylem) that are led to the stem of the plant. While gravity may want to pull the water back towards the ground, the water sticks to itself and these pipes. This capillary action keeps the water in the xylem in the same way that water stays in the straw when you pump water through it, except that evaporation and biochemical reactions provide an initial upwards pull.
